THE FRYER PROCESS.
The Engineering and Mining Journal of New York has the following on the Fryer process:

TO THE EDITOR:—In your editorial of January 15th, on the Fryer Process, with the general drift of which I cannot but agree, you recur several times to the high temperature which Mr. Fryer uses in roasting, objecting to it, as I understand you, in toto, as far as solid auriferous iron pyrites is concerned.

It is true, that in ordinary roasting of solid iron pyrites for smelting purposes, a high temperature is emphatically not wanted, because the charge, instead of roasting, would melt. In that state no further elimination of sulphur would be possible. But in roasting the same material for chlorination, although up to the last period of the process a low temperature must be maintained, it is necessary to raise at the close the heat to a bright red, in order to expel the last remaining sulphur.

Partly for the same reason, and partly for another which I shall presently mention, I can very well understand why Mr. Fryer wants a high temperature. This is, that at the end of his roasting process, when he has eliminated nearly all the sulphur (as much as is possible in a kiln), he probably wants to raise the temperature sufficiently to melt the gold in the ore. If the ore had been solid iron pyrites (with, say, 10 to 20 per cent. of silica), it would, under the conditions maintained in his furnace (presence of carbon and carbonic oxide), of course melt also; but there is no objection to that, except the higher cost of crushing for subsequent treatment. If, on the other hand, the ore had been the common California gold quartz, which contains from 1 to perhaps 20 per cent. of iron pyrites, the ore, as a mass, would remain unmelted, but a very stiff slag would be formed by the strings of protoxide of iron and the contiguous quartz sintering the mass, perhaps, while the gold would also be melted. But in either case the gold would be present in small, invisible globules, scattered through the ore; and in crushing and amalgamating this, the gold would present itself to the mercury in a bright state, so far as mechanical difficulties and losses permit.

In making this suggestion, I do not wish it to be understood that I think the Fryer patent kiln necessary, or even desirable, to obtain the results indicated. On the contrary, it seems to me open to grave objections, the principal one being that it is unnecessarily costly in its construction, and that it is not continuous in its operation, and that, on account of the unnecessary water cooling, it opens the way for a very large waste of fuel.

The suggestion of "Metallurgist" is reasonable. But as we understand it, Mr. Fryer maintains a high temperature nearly throughout his roasting process, and the conditions will, therefore, be materially different from those assumed by our correspondent.

ED. E. AND M. JOURNAL.

Our Colonial and Revolutionary Flags.

In the beginning of the Revolution a variety of flags were displayed in the revolted colonies. The "Union flags," mentioned so frequently in the newspapers of 1774, were the ordinary English red ensigns, bearing the Union Jack. These generally bore some patriotic motto, such as "Liberty," "Liberty and Property," "Liberty and Union," etc. It is uncertain what flag, if any, was used by the Americans at Bunker Hill. That displayed by Putnam on Prospect Hill, on July 18th following, was red, with Qui transiit inquit on one side, and on the other, "An Appeal to Heaven." The first armed vessels commissioned by Washington sailed under the pine-tree flag, a white flag bearing a green pine-tree. The first Republican flag unfurled in the Southern States, blue with a white crescent in the upper corner next to the staff, was designed by Colonel William Moultrie, of Charleston, at the request of the Council of Safety, and was hoisted on the fortifications of that city in September, 1775. The flag displayed on the east bastion of Fort Sullivan, afterward called Moultrie, on June 28, 1778, was the same with the word "Liberty" on it. On the west bastion waved the flag called the "great union," first raised by Washington at Cambridge, January 2, 1776. This consisted of the thirteen alternate red and white stripes of the present flag of the United States, with the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew emblazoned on the blue canton in place of the stars. This flag was carried also by the fleet under command of Commodore Esek Hopkins, when it sailed from the Delaware capes, February 17, 1776. Hopkins had displayed previously a yellow ensign, bearing the device of a rattlesnake in the attitude of striking, with the motto "Don't Tread on Me." The official origin of the "great union" flag is involved in obscurity. At the time of its adoption at Cambridge, the colonies still acknowledged the legal rights of the mother-country, and therefore retained the blended crosses of St. George and St. Andrew, changing only the field of the old ensign for the thirteen stripes, emblematic of their union. After the Declaration of Independence, the emblems of British union became inappropriate, but they were retained in the flag until the following year. Congress resolved, on June 14, 1777, "that the flag of the thirteen United States be thirteen stripes, alternate red and white; that the union be thirteen stars, white in a blue field, representing a new constellation."—Appleton's American Cyclopaedia, revised edition, article "Flag."
